

The Bay Area Teacher Development Collaborative

Teaching for Social Justice

a workshop presented by

Megan Voorhees

Director of the Public Service Center
University of California, Berkeley

Friday, March 5, 2004

9:00 to 3:00

Drew High School

2901 California Street, San Francisco

Explore how to raise social justice issues in the classroom in ways that encourage students to openly examine personally challenging and socially complex material. There will be particular focus on how to help students act on their social concerns in meaningful, safe ways and on tools for reflecting on social action. Participants will also share best practices and have time to develop lesson plans in small groups.

Facilitator Megan Voorhees has worked in the service learning field for 15 years and has run middle school and high school service learning programs in Oregon and California. She is currently completing a Masters of Arts in Ethics and Social Theory at the Graduate Theological Union and is focusing on the connections between activism and spirituality.

Cost: $50 members of BATDC

$60 non-members of BATDC

Lunch will be included

Teachers at all grade levels are welcome

Please RSVP by February 20, 2004

mcarvev@hamlin.org