

Teaching for Integrity and Ethics: Exploring our Successes and Challenges

Are we in schools doing a good job of teaching our students to live lives with integrity? Are we teaching appropriate skills at different grade levels? How do we explicitly discuss matters of ethics? The world that our children live in presents new and markedly different temptations and pressures from the one in which we grew up. Are we conversant as educators in the new challenges that are posed by digital media (the Internet, research databases, opportunities to plagiarize, cheat)? Are we adapting our practice to those challenges? Are we engaging our students in conversations about why academic integrity connects to questions of character? Are we confronting our kids when they cross the line on small things as well as big, so they can learn from their mistakes? Come and participate in a conversation about these questions and others relating to integrity and ethics in schools. The workshop will be facilitated by Karen Bradley, History Department Chair at Head-Royce School in Oakland, and Richard Kassisseh, Technology Director at University High School in San Francisco.

We hope that each of you will bring a question or dilemma that you have faced with your students. In addition, if you have a curricular program to share with the group, please let Janet know when you respond.

Date: Tuesday, November 8

Time: 9-3

Location: The Bay School, located in San Francisco's Presidio

Cost: $50 for Collaborative members

$60 for non-members

Everyone is welcome! Checks can be mailed in advance or brought to the event. The Collaborative mailing address is: BATDC, 2120 Broadway, San Francisco, CA 94115.

What else? LUNCH will be provided!

Please respond to Janet McGarvey, director of the BATDC, at mccgarvey@hamlin.org

